Use the white keys on the keyboard to play the notes in the same order. If you see a music keyboard, you'll notice that the black key creates two groups of black keys followed by a group of three black keys. It's always a pattern of 2 and then three black keys. The white key just before the last black key in the group of three black keys is Note A. Notes with black keys use the same name, but add accidental names: sharp (#) and flat (b). The black key after A is sharp. Think of the term sharp as a note close to the right. That's why A Sharp is after A. The same black key is B flat. Think of the term flat as a note close to the left. That's why B flat is just a note on the left side of B. You can also use notes to name notes: A: La B: Ti C: Do D: Re E: Mi F: Fa G: Sol You can find many keys on the keyboard that use the same note name, but they don't sound exactly the same when played. A complete set of note names is called octaves. The keyboard of the piano has a lot of octaves. Our virtual piano has 6 octaves.
